1. On 16, 18, and 19 June 1951 a Far East Communist conference was held in Peiping under the joint sponsorship of the USSR and Communist China.<sup>1</sup> It was attended by Malenkov for the USSR, Mao Tse-tung for Communist China, Kim Il-sung for North Korea, Ho Chi-minh for the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, and other unidentified representatives of Far Eastern Communist parties and governments.
2. The representatives consulted on mobilization activities in their various areas, and reached the following decisions concerning future Communist action:
  - a. The Communists must exploit existing differences among the Western Powers and attempt to isolate the United States by siding with Britain and France against the United States on controversial points.
  - b. They must attempt to create dissension between Great Britain and the United States by capitalizing upon the apparent desire of the British to maintain peace.
  - c. They must propagandize extensively in the Far East against the imperialism of the Western Powers, the United Nations embargo, and against the United States in general.
  - d. They must attempt to win over Japan to Communism.
  - e. They must reach a final decision as soon as possible as to whether the Korean war should be continued or whether it should be peacefully terminated.
  - f. Either Taiwan or Iran should be selected as the area for opening a second front at an opportune time.
